The PLAYED-OUT PLAINSMAN

Copyright © 1961, by Warner Bros. Inc.

Ollie Owl was just settling down for his afternoon nap, when suddenly the strangest noises ever heard pierced the air. He jumped up and went outside to investigate, and what he saw he almost could not believe. There was Henery Hawk, running around in circles, dressed up like an Indian!

"Henery!" commanded Ollie. "Come here this instant!" But Henery was too busy to hear him. "The most ridiculous sight I've ever seen," snorted Ollie, "is a chicken hawk with a feather stuck in his head. And that war paint smeared over your beak — now really. Just what in the world are you up to?"

Henery came to a screeching stop beside his friend. "It was in a book of yours about the Old West. The book told about the cowboys and the Indians, and how they used to do things. Well, I figured I wasn't doing so good as a plain chicken chaser, anyway, so I decided that I'd pull an Indian raid on the chickens. If I can scare them bad enough and throw them into confusion, I may be able to surround them singlehandedly."

"Henery," said Ollie softly, "are you sure you read all of the book? It seems to me you've left something out..."

"Don't have time to read more — got to be off on my Indian raid," Henery replied. "Me heap big Chief Catchem-Quick!" And he was on his way towards the barnyard before Ollie could say another word.

Foghorn Leghorn had heard the noise, too, and fearing that something might be wrong, he climbed up on top of a rock in the middle of the chicken yard to get a better look. As he saw Henery approaching over the hill he blinked and rubbed his eyes.

"Good grief! I could swear I just saw an Indian coming over the hill," he said, blinking a few more times as Henery came closer. "Great galloping ganders — it is an Indian," he screeched, jumping straight up in the air. "Quick, girls, everybody in the chicken house. There are Indians in the hills."

"INDIANS!" shrieked all the hens at the top of their lungs. Suddenly the yard was a mass of flapping feathers as everybody ran in every direction. Foghorn Leghorn was in the middle, sputtering over his own words, trying to keep them calm.

"Heh-heh-heh," cackled Henery. "Just what I wanted. I've thrown them into complete confusion. Now I'll surround them." And with that, he jumped right smack dab in the middle of the melee.

So much dust was stirred up that no one paid any attention to Henery. In fact, several of the hens tramped back and forth over him in their excitement, wiping away his war paint and losing his Indian feather. When the dust had settled, there was Henery at the bottom of the mess, and Foghorn Leghorn was standing over him.

"Just because we've been attacked by Indians is no sign you can take refuge in here, you coward," boomed Foghorn as he lifted Henery up bodily and booted him out of the yard.

Ollie was reading the book about the Old West when Henery came limping by. "Hi!" Ollie shouted. "How was your Indian raid?"

Henery stopped and looked up at his wise friend. "You know, Ollie, I think there was something in that book I missed..."

"Yes," said Ollie, "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. Judging from the looks of you, you read about the Indian raid, all right, but forgot to find out what can happen to you in a stampede."
